

BRECKENRIDGE NEWS.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1879.

Tobacco Report.

CLOVERPORT, Feb. 12.—The market seems to be in a strong, but not buoyant, and is forcibly illustrated by quoting—sometimes on a sander—sometimes on a scale, and sometimes, and then die bon-boum!. The weather is such, however, that little will be done.

We understand that large sales have been recently made in New York to the Hayes, and some to the W. H. Richardson of Louisville, at fancy prices. All others were P. V. D.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

Snow Sunday.

More snow, Monday.

Cabbage and onions would find ready sale in our market.

Min. party at Judge Murray's to-night. All are welcome.

Box.—Feb. 17, to the wife of Jack Tindel, a girl.

Jahn L. Helm, Esq., of Louisville, was in town Sunday.

Mr. John A. Crittenden, of Frankfort, is registered at the Cloverport Hotel.

Snowflakes something less in size than a meeting-house fell here Monday afternoon.

The town was fully enamped itself on Harrison Street. Patriots attending the convention, you see.

Mrs. Nannie Jolly, of Hardinsburg, passed through town last week, on her return home from Jeffersonville, Ind., where she has spent some weeks.

"Happy Jack" Crittenden, of Frankfort, was in town during the latter part of last week, and attended the convention Monday.

The town trustees published an ordinance prohibiting the planting of gardens in the corporation limits by permitting hogs to run at large in the streets and alleys of the town.

Remember that the charter election comes off this first Monday in March. It is time to be looking around and selecting our future "Consept Fathers." There's a year's work ahead for the new board of trustees in looking at the mud in the streets, and—wishing it was at Jericho.

We are authorized to announce that Hon. D. R. Murray will deliver an address to the students of the High School, on Saturday night, February 25. The address will be delivered at the schoolroom, and it is hoped that the speaker will be greeted by a large audience of the citizens of Cloverport, particularly the young, to whom the lecture will be of especial interest.

Notwithstanding the inclement weather, a large and appreciative audience attended the lecture of Dr. Henderson at the Methodist Church, Wednesday night. The discussion was on the subject of education, and it is hoped that the speaker will be greeted by a large audience of the citizens of Cloverport, particularly the young, to whom the lecture will be of especial interest.

Notwithstanding the inclement weather, a large and appreciative audience attended the lecture of Dr. Henderson at the Methodist Church, Wednesday night. The discussion was on the subject of education, and it is hoped that the speaker will be greeted by a large audience of the citizens of Cloverport, particularly the young, to whom the lecture will be of especial interest.

Mr. Frank, and his informant, are both making a great noise about the list of claims to be published. Our publisher, Mr. Babbage, was present when the vote was taken, and Dr. Frank was not. Mr. Babbage says the proposition to print was carried by a large majority. His statement is supported by four magistrates to whom we have applied for information sufficient to show upon which we may get the publication to be concerned, and the only interest we feel in the matter is to place the members of the county court in a proper position before the people. That is all.

A good joke is told of a young man of our city—indeed it is true, too—who recently called to spend the evening with some young girls in town, and was well entertained that night. The next day he was in town again, and wondered mightily how anybody managed to get what he thought was his, and to prove that he had, produced a pair of new ones he had recently purchased. It was then resolved that the discarded shoes should be donated to Parson Edington, as the only man in the community possessing enough "understanding" to comprehend their virtues.

At the Cloverport Hotel.

Dr. H. A. M. Henderson, A. C. Crittenden, Frankfort; G. L. Reid, Joseph B. Head, Brent Moore, L. S. Helm, D. N. Hope, W. G. Head, W. H. Murray, John L. Helm, John W. Hayes, John C. Gaglione, Miss Nannie Jolly, Hardinsburg; J. G. Adams, New York, N. Y.; A. J. Adams, L. Wilson, T. Neisted, F. Hofface, W. H. Williamson, Lawrence county, Ohio; T. Sloemaker, Amsterdam, Ind.; Lyman Vesel, Shelly, county.

A Rift in the Clouds.

The board of magistrates of Hancock county, on the 10th instant, elected William Murray Brown, Esq., county judge of that county.

We learn the choice was made with great unanimity and without Mr. Brown's opposition. A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

were doubtless worthy men, the justices turned a deaf ear to all and chose a man whom they deemed the most suitable. All who know Mr. Brown concur in the wisdom of the choice.

A vacancy had been created by the death of John F. Jackson, and the board of magistrates had called together to select a successor.

Although, however, a majority of whom

